Mela Notes is published three times a year, in winter, spring, and fall. It is distributed to members of the Association and to nonmember subscribers. Membership dues of $10.00 bring Notes and other mailings. Subscriptions are $10.00 per calendar year, or $3.00 per issue for most back numbers. Address dues, requests for membership information, or subscriptions to Dona Straley, Secretary-Treasurer MELA, Main Library Rm. 308, 1858 Neil Avenue Mall, Ohio State University, Columbus, Ohio 43210.
The American Library Association Annual Meeting will be held July 6-11, 1985 in Chicago.

Yet another opportunity to get together and discuss matters of concern:

Among the hundreds of meetings at ALA there are several of particular interest to us few MELA members among the 12,000 librarians. I hope many of us will be able to attend to discuss business and have a good time.

I welcome you all to Chicago.

Many thanks to Palmira Brummett for her assistance in typing and editing this issue of MELA.

In reference to my article "Book Publications on the Iran-Iraq War" (MELA NOTES 33, Fall, 1984), I have some new information on Persian language publications that was kindly forwarded to me by Paul Sprachman, Assistant Middle East Librarian, University of Chicago.

Contrary to my statement on the national bibliography of Iran (p. 5), three issues of the bibliography have been published since 1979 (nos. 47, 48, and 49). Two additional sources where new Persian language publications are listed are Nashr-i Danish and Payk-i Kitab.

Sincerely,

Tony Gardner
MEETING: SEVENTH INTERNATIONAL MIDDLE EAST LIBRARIES CONFERENCE

The flowering spring gardens of the Chester Beatty Library and Gallery of Oriental Art in Dublin provided a lovely background for the three-day meeting of Middle East librarians convened by the U.K. Middle East Libraries Committee, on which our own organization was modeled. MELCOM meets in Great Britain twice a year, but its members also gather each spring with their counterparts from the Continent and interested librarians from other areas. Dunning Wilson and Francine McNulty have each attended a regular meeting of MELCOM, and I was fortunate in being able to be present at this international conference, which drew almost thirty delegates from a dozen nations including some in the Middle East. Previous international meetings have been held in Aix-en-Provence, Berlin, Cambridge, Paris, Oxford, and Leiden; next year's will take place in Madrid. Although preservation was the overall theme of the conference, the papers ranged over other topics as well. English and French seem to be the working languages of these meetings, and most delegates managed to communicate in both.

At the inaugural session on Wednesday, April 17th, delegates were welcomed by MELCOM's President, Derick Hopwood of Oxford University, and Secretary, Paul Auchterlonie of the University of Exeter. The balance of the morning program consisted of presentations by the Irish delegates and a very interesting paper on the little known parallels and connections between the Irish and Egyptian nationalist movements. Wilfred Lockwood, Director and Librarian of the Chester Beatty Library, outlined the life of the American mining engineer whose early retirement and prosperity enabled him to devote almost half a century to building the great collections of art, manuscripts, and early printed books that now belong, through his bequest, to the Irish nation. The Islamic Collection of the Chester Beatty ranks among the finest anywhere, and its Curator, David James, gave a preview, illustrated with slides, of the most outstanding items, many of which had been put on display especially for the conference. Patricia Donlon, Reference Librarian and Curator of the Western Collection, spoke as well about some of the general characteristics of the Library's collections and about the need for further support. Following this introduction to the treasures of the host institution, Geoffrey Roper of Cambridge University read his previously mentioned paper on "Irish and Egyptian Nationalism in the Imperial Era", providing a hitherto unexpected link between the area of our professional concern and the locale of the conference.

The focus of the afternoon sessions that day was on preservation. After Paul Auchterlonie summarized the conclusions of the recently published Ratcliffe Report on Preservation Policies and Conservation in British Libraries, a succession of speakers described relevant programs at their institutions. Yasin Safadi outlined "Conservation Policies for Oriental Material at the British Library Reference Division" while Gillian Grant detailed the "Conservation in Oxford" of photographic collections, and Radhia Tohidi of the Institut du Monde Arabe in Paris spoke of its various microfilming and documentation programs.

On the second day of the conference delegates viewed two films about the formation and treasures of the Chester Beatty collections before exploring the galleries in person. David James gave a gallery talk highlighting some of the finest Islamic works on display and brought out a number of manuscripts of particular interest to some of the conference participants. Following an afternoon excursion to the Irish countryside, the delegates were invited to the Curator's home for an evening buffet, continuing, I was told, a tradition of local hospitality at these international conferences.

On the third and final day of the conference we heard presentations by Marie-Jose Bianquis of the University of Provence in Aix on "The Reorganization of Arab and Islamic Studies" at her institution, Yves Porter of the Sorbonne Institut d'Etudes Iraniennes on "Persian Lithographies", and Paul Auchterlonie on "The Distribution of Arabic Books in British Libraries". Two delegates from the Middle East also spoke. Izzat Awf Zahideh of the University of Jordan Library brought us up to date on "The Jordanian National Bibliography since 1980" while Norma Hazboun, a librarian at Bir-Zeit University shared with us some of "The Problems of Acquiring Arabic Publications in the Universities of the West Bank". I had been invited to survey "Recent Developments in Middle East Librarianship in North America", and Gerald Fitzmaurice of Datasolve came to describe the online database known as World Reporter although telecommunications difficulties prevented a demonstration. It is impossible to give further details of these presentations here, but several of the papers are likely to be published. I would be glad to share further information about the meeting with anyone who inquires.
A final banquet in the port of Dun Laoghaire concluded the Seventh International Middle East Libraries Conference, which ended with rousing good cheer in wine and song—another MELCOM tradition suitable for adoption by MELA.

‘Ali ibn Husayn al-Ansaari / containing according to the identification of a visiting scholar / 1. The treasure of the faithful; 2. Great selections; 3. The essentials of medicine and the essential sciences. No other information was furnished except that the author lived about 1200 A.D. Item remains unidentified.

Libraries and Western-language scholars of Islam, and especially 'Ithna-'ashari Shi'ī thought should note this important contribution of H.M. Tabataba'i. The author holds degrees from both Oxford and Tehran University. He is professor of Islamic Law at the Islamic University in Qum, Iran, and, in alternate years, visiting professor at Princeton. He has authored and edited a number of studies, most in Persian, on a variety of topics, including the history of Qum itself. An Introduction is his second English-language work, the first being Kharaī in Islamic Law (London, 1983).

An Introduction comprises two sections. In the first the author offers an overview of 'Imami law and its sources, a discussion of its nature, and an outline of major jurisprudential issues. In the concluding chapter of this section he discusses the eight major developmental periods of 'Imami law, from the period of the presence of the 'A'imma within the community to the school of Murteda al-'Ansari (d. 1864) and its followers, including such contemporaries as Hossein 'ibn Alī al-Burujirdi (d. 1961) and 'Ayatallah Ruhallah al-Khumayni.

The second section contains a bibliography of legal writings, published or preserved in accessible collections, of major 'Imami clerics throughout 'Imami history. This section is subdivided into two parts, the first comprising lists of comprehensive legal works, including fatwa collections, and the second comprising monographs. A bibliography follows of the names and major works of the 'Imami clerics cited in the work and references for the catalogues of the collections cited throughout. Indices of names and titles cited in the work conclude the book.

Several important points emerge immediately from close examination of Tabataba'i's efforts. Many of the several score 'Imami clerics and their works cited in both of Tabataba'i's works are largely unknown in the Western-language scholarly literature to date. In addition, a large number of works, most in Arabic, some in Persian, composed by clerics already well-known to scholars in the field are seen not to have been subjected to any rigorous comparative examination to date. Finally, of the eight developmental periods of 'Imami law discussed by Tabataba'i in An Introduction, five predate the Safawid period (1499-1722), when the faith was established as Iran's state religion; the sixth comprises developments in the Safawid period itself. Arabic, not Persian, was the primary language of expression of 'Imami writers in these six periods.

These points do not bode ill for the work of many contemporary Orientalist scholars of 'Imami thought. These scholars, interested in Shi'i doctrine prior to the Safawid period, have focused on specific issues of doctrine, utilized the relevant primary-language source materials, and generally have avoided sweeping generalizations about the nature of the 'Imami Shi'i faith.

By contrast, the study of the faith from the Safawid period to the present has been the domain of scholars drawn largely from Iranian studies. These scholars have studied the development of modern 'Imami doctrine and practice in the same manner as they have studied modern Iranian history, primarily through Persian-language primary and secondary sources, as well as Western-language sources. Based on such research, many modernist scholars have not hesitated to broach some sweeping characterizations about the nature and development of the 'Imami faith.

If, however, the careers, the Arabic-language and some Persian-language contributions of so many 'Imami clerics have not been systematically and comparatively examined, then the study of the history of the faith is incomplete, and the conclusions and broad generalizations offered by many about the nature of that history clearly are premature.

Examination of the works dealing with women, for example, most written in Arabic, might inaugurate a discussion of women in 'Imami law more useful than some of the more clearly polemical contributions on the subject to date.

To date there has been no introductory study of the history of 'Imami law in English. Tabataba'i has not only suggested an outline for that history, but provided information on the figures and works to be examined before a definitive study of 'Imami doctrine might even be contemplated. Librarians could assist Western-language scholars by acquiring the many published works cited in both of Tabataba'i's works.

The Middle East Political Directory. Lawrence Ziring.
Santa Barbara, California, Oxford, England: ABC-CLIO

According to the author, "This book identifies the terms, events, characteristics, movements, and institutions that describe the Middle East in the last half of the twentieth century." "It can be used in the classroom as a primary or supplemental text.". An important aspect of the book is the analytical or interpretative section following each entry called the significance. This section discusses the meaning of each entry from the author's viewpoint. It covers 23 countries.

This is one of the most controversial political dictionaries that I have ever come across in my twenty-five years of book reviewing practice. The author gives a special consideration to the Arab-Israeli conflict which made him devote a disproportionate segment of the dictionary to that single problem. This projects how important the Arab-Israeli conflict is to the author. Israel as a small and new state in the Middle East was given 51 entries while Egypt was given twenty-four entries and Iraq sixteen, Turkey thirteen, Saudi Arabia eighteen. The significance section expresses the personal opinion of the author which is not often based on an in depth objective knowledge of the two-sides of some Middle Eastern problems. Security of Israel is taken for granted as justification for the take over of the West Bank, Gaza Strip, and the Golan Heights and for the invasion of Lebanon.

The dictionary in some cases gives incomplete and even misleading information such as: "Sudan achieved its independence from Egypt in 1956" (p. 155). He should have said from Egypt and England, because up to 1956 England more than Egypt had the upper hand in Sudan affairs. The contradiction between what Nasserism means on p. 149 and the interpretative significance of the same term on p. 150 is clear and puzzling. This occurs in other terms in the dictionary especially in the terms related to Arab politics.

The dictionary also contains some errors on facts such as. (p. 107) "Berber speakers number in excess of ten million and represent 50 percent of the population of North Africa.". They should be twenty-four million in order for them to represent 50 percent of North Africa. Table seven, p. 416, in this same book indicates that the nations of North Africa have a population of about 48 million. The Middle East and North Africa Directory 1983-84 gives the same information: the population of North Africa is 48,804,000.

Examples of errors in translation are numerous such as: Mahdi was translated "The Savior" (p. 103) - it is the Guided by God. Baraka is not "magical protection" (p. 104) it is God's blessing. Another term Fedayeen was translated "Muslim faithful" on p. 169 (spelt Fedadyeen), "guerilla" on p. 181 (spelt fedeyeen), and "warriors of Islam" on p. 220 (spelt fedeyeen). The exact meaning according to the Arabic dictionary and everyday usage in the Arab world is: those who volunteer to carry out dangerous actions in war or commandos. Majilis-e-Shura is Arabic and it means the consultative council (p. 61). A political science dictionary should be somewhat comprehensive when it comes to political parties and movements. Many Middle Eastern political parties and movements are not included in this dictionary. Some are labeled movements while they are parties and vice versa. The author mentioned few political parties other than the communist (parties) which are banned in all Arab countries but one. There is no mention of the political parties in Egypt after 1970.

The political geography and geopolitics does not include any entry about the Sudan, North Africa, Saudi Arabia or Syria. The ethnicity and political culture (section 3) defines ethnicity in a somewhat vague manner and I could not understand the relationship between the names of the ruling families such as Al Sand, Al bu Said, Al-Khalifa, and Al-Sabah and the ethnicity or political culture. Nor could I understand the non-existence of entries for scores of ethnic groups which have political weight in Middle Eastern countries such as the Copts of Egypt, Yazidis of Yemen, Chaldians of Iraq, and the Jews of Morocco.
I would like to recommend the following to the publisher of the next edition of this book:

1. Have all the translations of the Arabic terms corrected if they are not correct.
2. Increase the entries for political parties, ethnic groups, and social movements.
3. Transliteration of foreign words should be standardized.
4. Impartiality and objectivity must be insured in a dictionary, especially when it is recommended as a secondary or primary source for American students.

Iran Media Index is a valuable tool for locating sources of information that normally do not appear in standard area studies guides and bibliographies. It "brings together in one volume a comprehensive, annotated index of all nonfiction films, film-strips, and television news and public affairs programs produced by major English-speaking countries..."(xi). While this applies to nearly all the entries in the Index, the compiler has also included films that were made in Iran by Iranian filmmakers. Ebrahim Golestan's Ganīnah-'i javāhirāt-i saltanatī ("The crown jewels;" p. 71: no. 296), for example, is a Persian documentary essay on what was once the backing of all of Iran's currency.

The Index classifies entries in two ways: by subject and by form. Subject headings are "Agrarian Reform", "Education", "The Qajar Era", "Leisure and Sports",

*The Index is part of an ambitious archival undertaking, "the first phase in a four-phase project, culminating in the creation of Iran Media Archives, which would house the films, filmstrips, and television programs [listed]" (xxi).
"Politics—Security, Torture", etc.; form headings include "United States Information Agency Newsreels" and "Television News". The latter headings represent a subgroup of some 3720 items that are listed chronologically. One wishes that they were also arranged by subject. Since the only index to the Iran Media Index lists film titles alphabetically, accessing this material by subject or by news personality featured in a particular broadcast is very difficult.

Naficy concludes his introduction with the hope "that the Index will be a resource for the study of Iranian culture and politics through audiovisual materials..." (xxii). While most of the films and tapes in the Index fulfill this function, the large net cast by the compiler has snared some dubious entries. Users will wonder what the following, to cite one example, has to do with Iranian culture and politics:

0185  [Inertial Guidance System]
How-to training tape designed for Iranian Airforce technicians on how to maintain and repair the inertial guidance system built [sic] by Litton for Northrop F E 5 fighter planes purchased by Iran. (p.12)

The compiler also cites "studies that have shown that audiovisual materials are helpful in lending meaning and depth to abstract concepts and faraway places, by providing viewers with realistic sounds and images of other cultures" (xxi). The Index seems to digress from its cross-cultural mission and veer toward the sensational in an entry that appears under the subject heading "Islamic Republic of Iran--US Hostages in Iran (general)"

1086  [Soldier Girls]
Critically acclaimed film, follows a platoon of 50 young women recruits in Charlie Co. at Fort Gordon Ga. as they undergo 14 wks. of basic combat training. Filmed during the hstg. crisis. One scene shows women running and chanting: "I want to go to Iran, I want to kill an Iranian, pillage, plunder, burn, rape." (p.58)

One of the chief strengths of the Index is that it provides a coherent organizational framework for material that, until recently, has suffered general bibliographic neglect. It brings the dense mass of US television programming on Iran that grew appreciably after the Islamic Revolution and spectacularly after the hostage taking under videographic control. The compiler and his colleagues have done a thorough job in combing the video archives of the three major networks and of National Public Television for their "Iran" tapes. Iran Media Index also provides a wealth of material documenting western (principally US) attitudes toward Iran. Naficy divides the ways in which the camera has caught and interpreted the country into three periods:

I. Exotic Undeveloped Iran (1900-1941):
   Newsreels; ethnographic films; Anglo-Persian Oil Co. documentaries.

II. Strategic Modern Iran (1942-1979):
   Television discovers Iran; positive images of Iran's modernization.

   Although the shortest span, more than three-fifths of the entries fall into this period.

This outline and the examples culled by the compilers provide the student of western attitudes toward the Middle East with a well-mapped area of research.

Misprints. Although the Index has retained "misspellings and grammatical errors found in original film titles" (xxiii), the following slips, which appear to be those of the proofreader, might be corrected in future editions of the work:

p.7; no. 0091 "Shaqyeq-e Suzan"
p.12; no. 0185 "build"
p.30; no. 0541 "eneters"
p.32; no. 0594 "Tati" must be "Tafti" (see p.114; no. 2181
p.36; no. 0668 "Aabadan" p.43; no. 0809 "especially"
p.78; no. 1492 "terrorists"
p.79; no. 1498 "mutialted"

The Institute for International Information Programs

The Institute for International Information Programs (IIIP) has been established to encourage and foster the participation of U.S. organizations in international information programs and projects and to monitor international research in information science and technology.

Two immediate objectives of the Institute which are currently in the process of being initiated are (1) to establish a Secretariat and coordinate a network for international information issues via a newsletter, and (2) to secure funding from private and public sources to support the program.

Long term objectives include:
Arranging for U.S. representation in international information organizations.
Participating in development programs.
Providing an information link for members of the U.S. community involved in various international meetings.
Advising the U.S. information community on matters with special emphasis on international matters.
Informing the U.S. Congress, government agencies, and private corporations on pertinent international information issues.

The IIIP may be expected to serve as one of the vehicles through which to plan and arrange the types of efforts formerly supported through the General Information Programme of UNESCO now that the U.S. has withdrawn from membership in that organization.

The Director of the IIIP is Inez L. Sperr, Executive Director, Migration Information and Abstracts Service. The members of the Board of Directors are Melvin S. Day, Vice President, Research Publications; Donald King, President, King Research, Inc.; and Claude E. Walston, Dean, College of Library and Information Services, University of Maryland. M. Lynne Neufeld, Executive Director of the National Federation of Abstracting and Information Services, University of Maryland, is Chairperson of the Advisory Committee. Paul Wasserman, Professor, College of Library and Information Services, University of Maryland, is the Project Director. The Board of Directors will be the initiating body for the business of the Institute.

The Institute is to be housed at the College of Library and Information Services of the University of Maryland in College Park, Maryland. A newsletter will be begun later this year to disseminate information on U.S. international activities. A clearinghouse for information will also be established at CLIS.

For additional information about the IIIP, please contact Dr. Inez Sperr, Executive Director, Migration Information and Abstracts Service, 294 Bunker Hill Rd. Orangeburg, N.Y. 10962 (914/359-8634), or Dr. Paul Wasserman, College of Library and Information Services, 4105 Hornbake Library, University of Maryland, College Park, MD 20742 (301/454-6070).
Middle East Scholars Affirm Academic Freedom

At its recent annual meeting, the Middle East Studies Association of North America (MESA) passed a resolution deploring certain activities of the American Israel Public Affairs Committee (AIPAC) and the Anti-Defamation League of B'na B'rith (ADL) which MESA believes could inhibit academic freedom. AIPAC was criticized for collecting "unbalanced information on students, faculty, and other parties..." through the use of surveys, while the New England Regional office of ADL was criticized for circulating on college campuses a confidential booklet "listing factually inaccurate and unsubstantiated assertions that defame specific students, teachers, and researchers as 'pro-Arab propagandists.'"

The resolution was approved by voice-vote and without dissent by more than 600 members attending the business meeting at the MESA Annual conference held 28 November-1 December 1984 at the Sheraton-Palace Hotel in San Francisco. MESA is the leading American association of scholars and professionals concerned with the study of the Middle East, with over 1400 members worldwide. University of Arizona Professor Michael E. Bonine is Executive Secretary of MESA, whose headquarters are located at the University of Arizona campus. Bonine emphasizes that the association is nonpolitical and nonpartisan, and takes no stand related to the political issues and conflicts of the Middle East. The association does, however, speak out on issues and matters which may infringe upon academic freedom.

Impetus for the resolution came from complaints by members who appear in the ADL booklet, or whose universities and programs have been listed by AIPAC. The AIPAC surveys resulted in a 196 page book, the AIPAC College Guide: Exposing the Anti-Israel Campaign on Campus by Jonathan Kessler and Jeff Schwaber, which profiles 100 colleges and universities, identifying 'pro-Arab' speakers and other allegedly anti-Israel activities. The New England Regional Office of the ADL was criticized for circulating a booklet listing profiles of national organizations and individuals as well as some specifically in Northern California. The introduction to the booklet said that "many of these propagandists use their anti-Zionism as merely a guise for their deeply felt anti-Semitism." In a recent New York Times article (January 30, 1985), the ADL's national director of campus affairs in New York, Jeffrey Ross, admitted that the document was written by "an over zealous student volunteer" who is no longer with the league and that this "unfortunate incident" would not be repeated.
Bonine stressed that the resolution was not to single out the ADL or AIPAC, but that "our concern is with academic freedom. All our members—including Israelis and Arabs—want to call attention to the potential harm which can result from lists and surveys of individuals which are 'based on the circumstantial evidence of religion, race, ethnicity, association, participation in public events, or affiliation with organizations.'"

MEETING ANNOUNCEMENTS

Middle East Microform Project:

Summer Meeting. As we agreed in our meeting of 8 January, I have planned a meeting for July in Chicago. The meeting is scheduled for Sunday the 7th of July from 4:00 pm to 6:30 pm. This will fill a time slot between the Executive Committee meeting of the Asian and African Section, ACRL, and the LC, Overseas Operations meeting. To the best of my knowledge this will not conflict with any other meeting which might be of interest to our members or friends. All of you are welcome to attend. The place will be announced at a later date.

John A. Eilts, Chair
Librarian

American Islamic College is seeking candidates for the position of Head Librarian. Position is available now.

American Islamic College is a Liberal Arts and Education College. It offers programs leading to Bachelors degrees in Islamic Studies, Arabic Studies, and Bilingual-bicultural Elementary Education.

The college Librarian reports to the Vice President and is responsible for administering the library.

Qualified candidates must have a MLS from an ALA-accredited library school and should have substantial experience in the management of an academic library. The college is seeking a person who can provide leadership in the enhancement of both the general and special collections; automation of library functions, financial planning and fundraising for the library, and library staff recruitment.

American Islamic College is an equal opportunity, affirmative action employer.

Salary is competitive and will be commensurate with qualifications and experience. Send letter of application and names of three references as soon as possible to:

Jesse Duggan

I hope you will mention the sad news of the passing of Jesse Duggan, University Librarian at the American University in Cairo. He was a relatively young man who died on March 29, 1985 after a short struggle with lung cancer. For 12 years, he headed the Library at AUC — always smiling and hospitable, always pushing many projects simultaneously. It was a happy experience to be in his company. I have fond memories of time spent with him, as I am sure other MELA members do also, chatting about libraries, books and the Cairo life. The new library building at AUC is certainly a tribute to his leadership and perseverance.

Seid Karic

Seid Karic, Associate Librarian in the Cataloging Department, IUB, died Wednesday, March 13, at the Bloomington Hospital following a brief illness. Seid, who cataloged a wide variety of Slavic, Turkic, and miscellaneous languages, was born September 1, 1916, in Gornja Tuzla, Bosnia. In 1963 he received a Master of Arts degree from IU and accepted a position as cataloger at the University. In recent years he was enrolled in the PH.D. program of the Uralic and Altaic Studies Department, and having completed all course work, was in the process of writing his dissertation in the field of Turkic Studies.

He is survived by his wife, Hayra; a son, Ismet; and a daughter, Esma. In Seid's memory, his co-workers have established a memorial fund at the Bloomington National Bank for the college education of his children. Seid's career and personal academic achievement were dedicated to the betterment of education. It is to honor his memory and commitment that the memorial fund is established to help Seid's children achieve these same goals.

Contributions should be sent in care of Sylvia Burbach, Cataloging, Main Library, Indiana University, Bloomington, IN 47405. Checks should be made payable to Hayra Karic (Memorial Fund).
CONTRIBUTORS TO MELA NOTES

All contributions related to Middle East Librarianship are welcome. Because of space limitations we ask that articles be limited to a maximum of 7 double spaced pages. Book reviews should be no longer than 500-700 words, or 2-3 double spaced pages.
Of all the problems that have plagued the Middle East during the past forty years those connected with Palestine-Israel have been the most explosive and chronically divisive. Now, with the publication of the State Department’s formerly "confidential" files on Palestine-Israel, study of Middle Eastern affairs is made not only possible but convenient. The State Department Central Files on the internal affairs and foreign affairs of Palestine-Israel from 1945 through 1954 are the definitive source of American diplomatic reporting on political, military, social, and economic developments destined to shape the future of the entire Middle East.

Although scholars who have visited the National Archives have been able to use the Central Files on Palestine-Israel for 1945-1949 in recent years, the files for 1950-1954 were just released in late 1984, and neither the 1945-1949 files nor the 1950-1954 files have ever been published in any format until now. By making available over 55,000 pages of special reports, confidential correspondence, minutes of meetings, interviews, and translated documents, this new research collection will be an essential addition to any library’s holdings on Palestine-Israel, the Middle East, and international relations. Filmed from the original files at the National Archives, our edition reproduces the complete files, with the exception of duplicate documents.

These files surely constitute an indispensable source for historians and political scientists concerned with the ongoing Arab-Israeli conflict. They will throw new light on the realities of the situation in Palestine at this crucial juncture in its modern history as well as illuminate U.S. government perceptions and attitudes over what was going on. Scholars, students, and foreign policy decision makers are bound to find here a rich source of material.

The University of Chicago Libraries Ottoman Microforms Project now has microfiche copies available of a selection of thirty seven vilayet salnames published by the provincial governments of the Ottoman Empire. These yearbooks were published in the late 19th and early 20th centuries and contain a wide variety of historical, economic and statistical information (names of officials, administrative districts, trade, produce, education, etc.). This is an ongoing project and we expect, at a later date, to have complete sets of all devlet and vilayet salnames published available on fiche.
